

for much of their machinery ; while the textile industries that have grown up on the banks of the Indus and the Ganges come equally under its sway. In fact, there is hardly a corner of the globe where the name of "Platts" is unknown ; while to thousands it is such a household word that they scarcely realise its significance ; and perhaps no greater tribute than this fact can be paid to its commanding excellence. A visit to the magnificent showroom in connection with the Hartford New Works is a liberal education in this respect and strikingly demonstrates the way in which the solidity and attractiveness of the firm's textile machines are combined with marvellous accuracy by means of the latest automatic appliances. Tangible tributes to the merit of Platts' machinery have not been lacking since the era of universal exhibitions was inaugurated in 1851. Beginning with the London Exhibition of that year, at which they received the Council medal, Platts have probably an unequalled record of international honours.
